Project Description/Justification:

The U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Community Oriented Policing Services, is expected to award the Department of Public Safety $2,000,000 to train law enforcement personnel in rural areas of the state to increase their ability to deal with crisis situations and to purchase equipment for better responses to emergencies. This project will continue the training and equipment program, funded by federal grants, that has been in place since FY2000. These grants provide basic and advanced training and equipment to many rural law enforcement officers in Western Alaska.

Law enforcement throughout most of the rural areas of Alaska is the responsibility of the Alaska State Troopers. From hub communities, state troopers respond immediately to life threatening emergencies, to felonies as quickly as possible, and to misdemeanors as soon as practical. However, delayed notification, long response distances (often to communities not accessible by road), uncertainties of weather and transportation, and limited manpower often hamper their efforts. Due to the limited number of available state troopers, village public safety officers (VPSO), or other law enforcement personnel, many villages in rural Alaska hire village police officers (VPOs) or tribal police officers (TPOs) to provide needed emergency response services at the local level. These VPOs and TPOs often receive only minimal salaries, training, and equipment due to the lack of a local tax base to support them.

This $2,000,000 grant will be spread over two years and will provide all of the associated costs of continuing in-service training of numerous rural law enforcement officers. The project will involve various modules of training, including basic law enforcement response, search and rescue, domestic violence, basic and advanced fire fighting, use of non-lethal weapons, statement analysis, suspect interviewing techniques, methods of instruction, first aid and CPR, and re-certifications to enhance rural law enforcement services.

The training will be spread over two years due to limited availability of instructors and teaching facilities, the logistics of obtaining equipment and supplies, and to reduce the negative impact on small rural communities when their local law enforcement officers are away attending training. The training will be held in rural hubs, transporting personnel from the outlying villages into a central point for classroom training.

The emphasis will be placed on pulling from the pool of previously trained officers to further educate them to become certified instructors in basic police topics, defense tactics, first aid, and less lethal options. Developing a cadre of rural instructors will benefit rural areas by allowing training to be provided to new officers in a timely manner.

Drug Abuse Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) will also be offered to rural officers to become D.A.R.E. training officers. This will increase the number of D.A.R.E. officers in the field with the ability to teach drug and violence prevention to school-age children in rural Alaska. The goal of this program is to interrupt the cycle of drug abuse and violence in rural communities by teaching children the skills they need to recognize and resist the pressures that cause them to experiment with drugs or alcohol, or become involved in gangs or violent activities.

In addition to the training, grant funds will be used to purchase new and replacement equipment needed in rural areas to enhance response to emergency situations. This includes emergency locator beacons, radios, computers, four-wheelers, boats and motors, snow-machines, and other law enforcement equipment.

This grant includes two years funding for the Alaska State Troopers' rural law enforcement training coordinator position, Sergeant PCN 12-1039.
